* _Photoshop Elements_ : This is a newer offering by Adobe that includes many of the features of Photoshop as well as tools for beginners. * _GIMP_ : Originally from the GNU Project, an open source project, GIMP has become the standard alternative to Photoshop for Linux. GIMP is free to use and comes with a feature-rich and efficient photo editing tool. There is a learning curve and more powerful Photoshop users have developed plugins that can be downloaded from the internet that make GIMP even more powerful. GIMP is also available on Macintosh. * _Painter_ : The Macintosh counterpart to GIMP, Painter is very powerful and has a learning curve similar to that of GIMP. Although Photoshop is the industry standard, many professionals still prefer Painter for its power and ease of use. GIMP offers more features but is a little slower. You can learn more about Painter and GIMP at `www.gimp.org` and at `www.painter.org`. If you have a Windows PC, a free program called Paint.NET (`www.paint.net`) is available that has many of the features of Photoshop. In fact, this free paint program was developed for the Windows platform by the same group that created Photoshop. If you'd like to create raster (bitmapped) images, or raster images of any kind, you may want to use Adobe Photoshop. However, a great alternative is the open source, cross-platform program called GIMP (see Figure 16-19). Figure 16-19. GIMP is a powerful image editing tool that comes with many useful plug-ins. ## Adobe Illustrator Adobe Illustrator (see Figure 16-20) is another very popular design program. Often referred to as a vector-image-creation program (it can render both bitmapped and vector-based images), Illustrator can be used to create complex designs for a variety of print and web formats. It can be used to create logos, labels, posters, title cards, and more. The library of graphic elements that comes with Illustrator is extensive, and you can download a variety of clip art, gradients, and other elements from the Internet. You can also use the font library. (See Chapter 5 for more about fonts.) Illustrator isn't a photo-ed

In this article, we share our favorite tools and best practices for Photoshop for photographers who want to get the most out of editing their images. Learning how to edit images is like riding a bike: Once you are comfortable doing it, it's hard to stop. The question of what software to use to edit images comes down to preferences: Some photographers are avid fans of traditional Photoshop; others prefer Adobe's Elements, which is an alternative to Photoshop. If you are using Windows, you can use either the Elements or Photoshop version. If you're a Windows user, this guide is for you. It will cover Elements 17 for Windows and Photoshop CC 18 for Windows. If you're a Mac user, you can skip this section, as you can use the versions of Photoshop and Elements for both macOS and Windows. How to install Adobe Photoshop Elements on Windows To use Photoshop Elements on Windows, it is important to know the following: What you will need: Elements for Windows or Photoshop for Windows To install Photoshop Elements you need to have a recent version of Windows. We recommend Windows 10 or Windows 10 Pro, as it can be difficult to install Elements on Windows 7 or Windows 8.1. If you're using Elements, it comes with most of the software you need to edit and print images. You need Photoshop and Lightroom, too, which costs a small amount of money to download and install on the computer. Lightroom is an add-on that collects together a lot of the tools you need to edit and print images. It works with most photo editing software, including Photoshop and Elements. Learn how to install Photoshop Elements for Windows You can use Photoshop for Windows from the computer that you use to access your computer. If you are running Windows on a laptop or iPad, it will usually be a remote desktop connection. Before you start, turn on the "Allow access to all users" option: After you turn on this option, Windows will ask you to let it know who is using the remote desktop connection. To do this, log on to the computer that has the Windows desktop you want to access, and click on the security icon on the lower right corner of your computer's screen. Click on "Users", and select the user accounts that you want to allow to access the computer. a681f4349e

The European Union's chief justice has told a think-tank that Britain should not have the right to veto treaty changes made in the bloc, as it would make it harder for the EU to hold members to account for human rights abuses. Franco Frattini, the European commissioner for justice, home affairs and internal affairs, says that to make the European Court of Justice the guardian of the EU's treaties, with the power to veto changes, would unnecessarily thwart the court's role. "The idea is only to enlarge the area of the European Parliament's competence," Frattini told the magazine Demos, published on Tuesday. "This means that the European Parliament should be able to make proposals on the basis of democratic legitimacy. Not by a resolution, but through the normal course of lawmaking by the European Parliament. And by this I mean that the European Parliament must be able to refuse a reform proposed by the commission in the first instance. "That is the choice: you accept European integration as a means or you do not. But that choice is not a choice between more or less integration. You cannot have more integration if you accept the choice that there is no choice." In his article, the former Italian justice minister argues that there is no constitutional basis for the veto, which would open the way for Britain to block the adoption of tighter controls on parliamentary immunity. Erich Wildermuth, the Brussels head of the European platform of the International Association of Prosecutors, said that the position was a radical development of the idea that countries could veto treaty changes within the EU. The article prompted accusations that Frattini's intervention was biased against Britain, as he was the justice commissioner when the British veto over Europol led to the row in the summer of 2005. Chris Doyle, the shadow justice minister, said Frattini had been "inundated with letters" of complaint from prosecutors' groups. "The European legal system is a key ally of law and order throughout Europe and we will need his support at the forthcoming crime summit to defeat moves to put fugitives back on the streets," Doyle said. "Franco Frattini is being advised by the commissioner for justice, home affairs and freedom of movement and I urge him to reconsider his position, which will cause huge anger throughout Europe." The Socialist MEP Dieter-Lebrecht Kohns said the article was "yet another clear example of German power and influence from the German political establishment". "If the British

We're Almost Ready for the Kids It's never really been a secret that fans of the Brandy[1]Cumberland County Choir are pretty darn excited about the upcoming release of the choir[1]'s debut album "On This Side of Heaven". In this edition of "On This Side of Heaven" the six-member choir opens with the memorable track, "Swimmin'". The song is an upbeat and catchy tune that portrays life with childlike innocence as the members sing about "swimmin' in the ocean". In a separate interview with "The Musician[1]s Store", choir director Patty Bolgiaza shared that the song is inspired by the individual personalities of the six members of the choir. Another noteworthy track on the album is "Dive Into The Sun" which features Alicia Meyer on backing vocals. This song is an upbeat and passionate message about being in love, and of course about dancing. For those of you who have heard the single, you'll know that Alicia's vocal range is incredible and she does a fantastic job on this song. The single will be released on May 31, and the choir has released two videos from the album. One can be seen on the choir[1]™s YouTube page, and it features a portion of the rehearsal of "On This Side of Heaven". The other video features the choir singing the single, "Dive Into the Sun". Finally, on April 21 the choir will perform the album at the Girl Night Out at the White Elephant in Fredonia. The album release party will be hosted by local DJ John Cardenias with a performance from Down With Me, a band from the Fredericksburg area. The choir was founded in January of 2011 when directors Patty Bolgiaza and Angela Monroe noticed a group of high school musicians were playing together almost every week, and seemed to have a great time doing it. They decided to form a group to play together for fun, and to perhaps someday find someone willing to invite them to perform at a festival, church or other big event. In February of 2012, that person was the Methodist Church of Cranesville, and the request came to do the Piedmont Region Youth Choir Festival. At that festival, they were immediately noticed by radio personality Rod Ogren, who happened to be at the festival and heard the group and immediately asked to have them join the Frederick County Choir. The choir was created with only a
