What's new in BIGFOOT - WEAPON SKINS Quot;ARCTIC Quot;:

IMMERSE PODDING in the September 2015 issue of BIGFOOT The Sundance Nordic Lodge will be opening for business November 1st. The date was chosen to coincide with the beginning of the seventh month of the year in the Norse calendar, aptly named Mâtut no. This development, if history and a little math are to be believed, is the first time in 17,000 years that the lodge's doors were opened to the public. Our location is a mere ten miles from the Pitt Lake International Airport, 5 miles from the lot where we moved more than a year ago, 20 miles from the Bitter Lake Wilderness area of which we are the gateway, and only 100 miles from a phone. Should my calculations be any indication, that's like being on the moon, Antarctica, or the Bahamas all at once! We looked at ten locations for the Lodge that were the best bets for good solitude and privacy, equal distance from each other, and practical. Public roads are in their best shape for at least 25 miles in any direction. The only other buildings are a few low multi-storied retail shops and the Municipal Government office. Beyond that, if you've ever attempted to get lost in the backcountry in Canada, forget it! It's best not to do it! The lot lies on the side of a narrow range that's 2,000 feet high. The 50 foot wide arm of a 747-sized jumbo jet sits at the crest of this mountain, giving the area a distinct chamber sound. Let's jump right into the action and run across some 3-D maps to start plotting locations. I went to the Geographic Information Systems (GIS) tool to import a look at the lot in question and have the dimensions - literally, feet of latitude and feet of longitude. Clearly, this lot extends westward far beyond the town of Clearwater, so that's not a factor in the decision making process. Pitt Lake is at 7,890 feet above sea level. Clearwater is a bit higher at 8,000 feet. Although we cannot use picturesque landlines to decide where to build, make no mistake about it, it is VERY ANGLO-NORDIC of us to think that lines that haven't been there for a quarter-million years are more faithful to the land than the land which has known them for all of time. Let's just put a pin in that idea and go for those 45 above-
