They can be used as mounts for yurt-dwelling nomads in Central Asia. They are typically small in size with a stocky, short-legged, long-necked build. They are not a straightbred breed but are a geographically variable selection of the domestic horse breeds that is now bred as one type. Culture Appearance and markings Their body types are normally of a light dun color, with darker legs and muzzle. They are a small horse type. Some of the Mongolian horses have dorsal stripes and bridle marks that can be up to 15-20 inches long. There is also a good variety of color and markings on the body, chest, legs, etc. The horses are fond of both water and grass and are generally docile. Most are of a light dun color, although darker types are occasionally seen in Mongolian stables, and all are genetically apt for hard work. Not all parts of the Mongolian horse are just light dun color, with spotted, darker, or black markings appearing on the body, legs, and face. Some color patterns may also appear on the tail as well. The legs of the Mongolian horse are usually black with white
