A couple of months ago we posted a news about a new version of a classic Windows app called "gLocale". Recently, the developers have been kind enough to share their new and improved version in the Windows 7 app store. Perhaps you recall gLocale - or as most know it "G-Locale". It is a small utility that allows you to quickly translate text typed in a web browser by selecting the text and typing a comma. But, there are some major improvements over the original gLocale. For starters, gLocale 2.1 has a complete "restructuring". It's a great start for the developer. Better even than I had expected. gLocale 2.1 has a new user interface. A fresh new look and feel. Even better, the developer has added functionality to gLocale 2.1 that is rarely seen in similar programs.gLocale 2.1 allows you to define a computer alarm. This can be done with a dll file included with gLocale 2.1. When run, the program will also ask you to enter your WOL and WOL URL settings. This is all done automatically when you setup the alarm. gLocale 2.1 will also give you a few other reminders when you use the program. This app was reviewed by Alex Knaub on Monday, April 11th, 2011 and was a finalist in the Windows Vista/7 category.
