Honda Earlier this week, we reported on the reason Gorillaz mastermind Damon Albarn said he'd go into the studio to work on a new Gorillaz album. It was because there would be no more festival dates for the band. Without touring, Albarn's plan is to sit down and write.

"When I started out as a producer, I would go in there and work on the basic track – there'd be a drum kit, a bass line and a melodic idea – and then I'd hand it off to other people, and it would probably take me a couple of months to finish it all." He's not new to the music world: "I've done it for years." Lyrically, Albarn said the aim is always the same. "I just try to write something that's truthful." He added, "I'm always thinking 'what would Baz Luhrmann do?' It's like Robert Altman in a way; I've always admired that that kind of freedom, trying to write a film all the time." He says writing for Gorillaz is much more fun and less stressful than his solo album, "Damon Albarn": "The chances of something coming out which is really bad is very high." As for the working title of the new Gorillaz album, Albarn said c6a93da74d
