All software authors like to design their own icons. Most of the time, we don't really care how good they are or how much time it takes to create them, as long as they look nice and convey the message we want to. In such cases, simply the task takes too much of our time. However, when we have to make a large number of icons, this task may become tedious and lead to burnout. This is where The IcoFinder comes into place. We have gathered some good free.ico (Windows icon format) resources. The application helps you to find out which image file types are supported by Windows and which are available for third party software. The IcoFinder is pretty simple. You just enter the filename of the icon you would like to get, and it searches the complete database of available icon resources. You are allowed to enter a number of files to be looked up. The program returns a list of available icons and even a preview of the icon itself. IcoFinder is quite fast and doesn't take much of your time to process. We believe that such a functionality should be available for everyone, and we hope that you agree with us. So, in case you have a software that needs a custom icon and don't know how to do it, download The IcoFinder. I'm sorry but I didn't really know what I was doing with it, either. I just used the free version and the customizing settings. It looked pretty easy but the best part was being able to set it up so my friends could all have a copy of it without having to get a separate version of it. I use the free version and I have it set up so that you can change your layout as you like. However, you only have a few layouts to choose from and each layout is about 8-10 pages long. You get the bigger versions of the layouts when you upgrade, but it's pretty expensive. I chose the $24.95 plan because I'm fine with upgrading and I didn't want to add on any additional fees for the upgrade. You get a popup when you hit a certain amount of colors or sizes on your pages.
